BSc (Hons) Global Business Management

Course Structure

Semester 1	Responsible Strategy 20 credits	Transforming Self and Organisations 20 credits	Dissertation 40 credits
Semester 2	Project Management 20 credits	Digital and Data Driven Marketing 20 credits

Module Synopsis

Transforming Self and Organisations

Transforming Self and Organisations will support you in developing alternative approaches to analysing organisations, people and work practices. A research-rich curriculum will enable you to develop your appreciation and application of Critical Management tools and perspectives which challenge conventional approaches to understanding organisations. You will examine the practices of large corporates through to SMEs, NFPs and social enterprises, interrogating, challenging, questioning what is typically taken-for-granted, seen as usual and appropriate, to recognise the inherent power and control that exists, to propose far-reaching change within organisations and society that prioritises fairness, justice, equality, diversity and sustainability.

Responsible Strategy

You will learn about the context of responsible strategic thinking, how to identify and explore sustainable business opportunities as a source of competitive advantage. You will gain an appreciation of the overarching principles of setting and executing a responsible and sustainable organisational strategy. Within the setting of these strategic objectives, you will understand how the associated responsible decision making will impact on both internal and external stakeholders. Your learning will span across private and public sector organisations, MNEs and SMEs.

Digital and Data Driven Marketing

Direct and Digital Marketing: You will cover the fundamental practices in the direct marketing field, which will include acquisition and retention strategies, customer profiling and segmentation, database marketing, permission marketing and personalisation, relevant legislation and campaign testing. Digital Media: You will explore the range of communications media available, ranging from traditional offline channels (such as direct mail and telemarketing) through to the ever-growing range of digital media options. Campaign Planning: Here, you will be introduced to the principles of campaign design, from initial context analysis and goal setting through to campaign implementation and evaluation.

BSc (Hons) Global Business Management (Human Resources)

Course Structure

Semester 1	Responsible Strategy 20 credits	Transforming Self and Organisations 20 credits	Dissertation 40 credits
Semester 2	Project Management 20 credits	Contemporary Issues in Business and Management 20 credits

Module Synopsis

Project Management

In this module, you will learn about the role of a project and project manager in organisations and the concepts and techniques required to manage the core aspects of a project. The main topics covered include the core knowledge areas outlined in A Guide to the Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK) published by Project Management Institute (PMI) as well as essential fundamental theories, knowledge, and techniques required to manage a project in contemporary business settings. These topics include: (i) Defining project characteristics, lifecycle, and activities. (ii) Understanding how projects drive change and achieve strategic goals in organisations. (iii) Realising the role of the project and project manager in various organisational structures and cultures. (iv) Managing core project aspects, such as stakeholder relationships, scope, cost, schedule, and risk. (v) Distinguishing traditional, agile, and extreme project management approaches.

Contemporary Issues in Business and Management

In this module, you will learn about critical thinking and reflection, and doing so, you will develop the necessary critical skills to perform both of these effectively as a learner in higher education. You will learn about the necessary academic skills required to undertake a critical review of existing literature on a contemporary issue within the business and management disciplines. On completing this, you will be able to produce a critical literature review on a subject appropriate to your degree programme.

Here, you will be introduced to the module before identifying how to select a contemporary issue within business and management. You will learn about the development of critical thinking and what is meant by a literature review as well as the importance of being able to write a literature review.

You will learn how to get started in this development; by searching for sources and developing essential research skills including reviewing literature and critical evaluation, before going on to develop your own critical literature review which represents the module assessment.

BSc (Hons) Global Business Management (Marketing)

Course Structure

Semester 1	Responsible Strategy 20 credits	Responsible Marketing Strategy 20 credits	Dissertation 40 credits
Semester 2	Project Management 20 credits	Digital and Data Driven Marketing 20 credits

Module Synopsis

Responsible Marketing Strategy

The module provides students with a comprehensive understanding of concepts, theories and techniques in the context of strategic marketing, responsible marketing and sustainability. The intension is to support the development of knowledge and skills required to undertake strategic analysis of markets and organisations and formulate a competitive, responsible marketing strategy. A contemporary approach to marketing is adopted throughout the module, as you will have the opportunity to learn and discuss the concepts that have changed the way we perceive marketing today. In doing so, you will examine, both theoretically and practically, a number of areas associated with responsible marketing strategies, such as:

Contemporary Strategic Marketing and Responsible Marketing.

On completing the module, you will be able to critically evaluate the usefulness of marketing knowledge in the context of responsible business and sustainable consumer behaviour and apply theory to develop appropriate marketing strategies. You will also develop the skills required for the effective integration of learning from marketing and other business areas into a plan for solving business problems.

Dissertation

The dissertation module aims to equip you with the necessary intellectual and practical skills for undertaking an individual student-led, ethical investigation into an applied business (or the named degree) problem or issue. In addition, the dissertation aims to equip you with key transferable, employability skills, including: time management, project management, communication (written and verbal), negotiation, persuasion and influence, discovery, initiative, creativity and innovation in problem-solving, and analysis. This module provides you with the opportunity to examine in depth, a business-management challenge of direct interest and/or that vexes you within your work or social life. Following initial weekly lectures and seminar-workshops, which provide an introduction to undertaking Business-Management research, you will work with a supervisor to identify a suitable research area, to generate empirical (primary) or secondary data, to analyse this data and to draw theoretically informed conclusions.

BSc (Hons) Accounting and Finance

Course Structure

Semester 1	Responsible Strategy 20 credits	Strategic Management Accounting 20 credits	Dissertation 40 credits
Semester 2	International Finance and Responsible Management 20 credits	Contemporary Corporate Reporting 20 credits

Module Synopsis

Strategic Management Accounting

In this module, you will develop an understanding of the nature of Strategic Management Accounting and its use in strategic decision-making, planning and control. There is emphasis on the use of information that relates to factors external to the firm, as well as non-financial and internally generated information. Historic approaches of traditional management accounting have been criticised for providing misleading information and are compared and contrasted to more modern methods of Strategic Management Accounting to assist in business decision-making.

Contemporary Corporate Reporting

You will learn how to read and critically interpret both the financial information and narrative content of company reports. To do this, you will study the theory and context of corporate reporting, including ethical issues, and the international framework for reporting, as well as very practical techniques such as ratio analysis. Building on the calculation of ratios studied in previous modules, you will use ratios to help you analyse a company's performance by selecting appropriate comparators and considering the figures in the context of a company's industry and its business strategy. You will also consider the role of integrated reporting and sustainability reporting.

International Finance and Responsible Management

The module covers the core aspects of raising capital and determining financing, through to investing capital in major corporate decisions, and finally returning value to shareholders. Specifically you will study in the module; Sustainable Value Management, Stock Market Efficiency, Capital Asset Pricing Model, Portfolio Theory, International Cost of Capital, Capital Structure Decisions, Dividend Policy, Corporate Valuation and International Merger & Acquisition activity. The module has a focus on business responsibility of all of those areas, concentrating on professional codes of conduct in areas such as the banking industry, accounting and similar finance areas, and the types of dilemmas that graduates could face in professional practice.
